Current Events On Ethical Issues in The Real World

The ethical dilemma was obtained from the Guardian news website "the ethicist will see you now: unraveling dilemmas at a decision-making helpline," written 14th of August 2021. The dilemma news can be obtained in <https://www.theguardian.com/lifeandstyle/2021/aug/15/the-ethicist-will-see-you-now-unravelling-dilemmas-at-a-decision-making-helpline> written by Stephanie Wood. Wood has used her experience to express how individuals face a problem dealing with ethical dilemmas during the coronavirus pandemic. For example, Wood (2021) states that the pandemic has altered individuals' normal activities such as social gatherings. However, her elderly neighbor, a widow, has loosened the disease rules and hosts unlawful social gatherings. The author does not want the disease to spread in their neighborhoods and is in a dilemma on what to do without offending her or cause an outcome that will result in bitterness. By contacting Ethi-call, an Ethics Centre free decision-making helpline was able to analyze the situation and provide the best outcome. the theories aligning with this ethical dilemma comprise the deontological theory. Deontology theory states that some activities are ethically necessary irrespective of their outcomes for human welfare. Therefore, Doris asked the author what they see as their duties as apartment residents and other roles. The advice provided more alternatives and concluded that as a member of the strata committee in the building, Wood could plan for a general notice to remind residents of government restrictions. This will not be specific to the source and resident target.
