Globalization

Question 1

Nashville is the city of Tennessee in the United States and is in Davidson County, home to many universities and colleges. It is also known for country music. Primarily, its economy depends on agricultural produce from cotton, livestock, tobacco, and music as well. Because of country music, this has created tourist attraction, which in turn has boosted Nashville's economy even further, such that it has improved its health care system to accommodate its citizens (Fry, 2017).

Question 2

Contemporary globalization is portrayed by the growing connection between political, economic, and cultural operations of globalization. Some of the positive impacts of globalization are as follows. Globalization has increased the level of employment around the globe as individuals can work in different countries as long as they are qualified for the job (Eriksen, 2018). With globalization, companies have set up offices in different countries, for instance, Google has its offices in most of the countries in the world, and this has created employment for the people in those countries. It has also impacted positively on education as students can move from one state to the other in search of quality education; this, in turn, helps in developing the economy of the student's country when they go back due to the knowledge and skills they have gained.

The security threat facing the United States caused by contemporary globalization is the aspect of free trade between the countries. In that, the United States can import items that are relatively affordable from other countries into the country for purposes of improving its economy. Free trade is a security threat because the industries in the United States that are producing the same products being imported from other countries are being affected since no one wants to buy those products. The industries are affected business-wise since their sales are going down. In this scenario, the products coming into the country are also dangerous to the citizens of the United States. For instance, in a recent case, the manufacturers of Huawei mobile phones were banned from exporting their phones to the United States because the phones were used to spy on the country (Peter & BANGA, 2020). Such threats can affect the lives of the citizens in the US because all their important details will no longer be safe. The best solution is to stop trading with countries that have malicious intentions, and the second solution is to minimize trading by building up the local industries and promoting their products to the citizens.

Question 3

At-will employment is an agreement whereby an employee can leave a firm any time due to any reasons, ⁶ and the employer can fire an employee ⁵ at any time without giving them any notice. The legislative exception of at-will employment is ⁵ public policy, a covenant of good faith and, implied contract, (Arnow-Richman, 2016). In regards to the court's ruling on the rights of employers and employees, each of these parties has a part to play. Employers are expected to offer access to the resources and should respect the employees while the employees are expected to do their work seriously. For instance, if an employee reports to work late consecutively for one week with no explanation whatsoever, the employer is likely to fire them without notice because it shows that the employee is not taking their work seriously.
