

1-

Givens, Ron. (2010). New light shed on Kent State shooting. American History, 45, 4, 7.

The article New Light Shed on Kent State Shooting (2010), the author mentioned about the new recording evidence of the Kent University Shooting in the Seventies by the National Guardsmen. The Guardsmen fired their weapons at university students. As a result, the Guardsmen killed four students, and nine students were wounded. This incident happened because the protestors were against the Vietnam War, and it was all over the country. This article gives a clue of who ordered the National Guardsmen to fire their weapons at the students. In this article, the author mentioned the nowadays technologies that were not available back then to help investigators to know who ordered these Guards to shoot.

The author is standing with the students and with the protestors in his article. The author potentially news who ordered the Guardsmen to shoot by recognizing the recording voice at that time. Besides that, he is seeking justice for those who were died and wounded in that shooting.

O'Hara, J. F. (2006). Kent State/May 4 and Postwar Memory. American Quarterly, 58(2), 301-302. Retrieved from <http://rave.ohiolink.edu/ejournals/article/347498731>

In the Spring of May 4, 1970, from every year Kent University does memorial ceremonies remembering the shootings that happened in the 1970s' killing four college students. That shooting turned Kent University to be one of landmark of the Vietnam War. Many of the people on the campus and may from off the campus come and gathering raising objects and artifacts to support the people who killed on May 4th by the Kent University with programs and activities. The Vietnam War made lots of domestic conflicts in the nation. Still people remembering the war and its event and history behind it. There were four students who were killed in this protest. Two protested students were killed and two were drop out to die weren't protesting in that shooting at Kent University. Related to the subject matter, when President Nixon's' announced on April 30, 1970 to the Americans people, he ordered the military to attack Cambodia, it was the sparked to many of Americans protested against that war across the nation. At Kent State University, was a weekend of violence started, at 12:24pm on May 4, when twenty-eight Ohio National Guardsmen fired their guns against the crowd of protestors.