Mollie R. Wheat Memorial Clinic (February 9, 2017):

John Wheat named the facility which he set up after his mother in memory of her death where she succumbed to cancer. The specific kind of cancer that killed Mrs. Wheat is breast cancer. The clinic stands for the same principle that the founder personally believes. Mollie R. Wheat Memorial Clinic is free and operated by the students from the Indiana School of Medicine. The vision of the Mollie R. Wheat Memorial Clinic is to serve the people who seem not to deserve the service. The clinic also provides training about chronic diseases and provides a gateway for the chronically ill to find treatment. The mission of Mollie R. Wheat Memorial Clinic is to provide education and preparation for future healthcare in the rural areas by enriching and taking care of the underserved people in the community using professionalism. Terminal illness in the form of cancer must be addressed by professionals. The Mollie R. Wheat Memorial Clinic helps cancer, terminal and acute patients get help because their condition is expensive and psychologically demanding to deal with. I hope that we have like this place in my county, so we can let people who have cancer how they could deal with the cancer.

Saint Anne Clinic - Wabash Valley Health Center (April 11, 2017):

. Wabash Valley Health Center's Saint Anne Clinic provides a multitude of solutions to patients of acute and chronic diseases. The institution deals with the whole wellness of the individuals it hopes to assist. Saint Anne Clinic also has a wing to provide athletic training facilities and services for clients. This is made possible because of the partnership that they have with Indiana State University. Patients come to the Saint Anne Clinic get help for pains and injuries that are sustained from athletic activities. Wabash valley runs a program through which clients enroll to receive healthcare insurance for dental, mental, behavioral and regular treatment. One of Wabash Valley's main areas of interest is behavioral health. The behavioral health section at this institution enables assessment, intervention and treatment of distressed individuals. I think this is a good place to go for those who have chronic diseases. Thus, I would like to suggest it to my friend, so she can take her father there

Student Health Promotion (March 23, 2017):

This is an office which specializes in promoting the health of students of the Student Counseling Center. The Student Health Promotion specializes in preventing issues that affect students' ability to perform well in academics. The aim of this program is to ensure that students have the mental health that is necessary to graduate. It is the responsibility of the office of Student Health Promotion to intervene when alcoholism, sex, finances and health affect an individual's experience in Indianan State University. Issues such as relationships, access to good food and low self-esteem because more dropout rates than many universities realize. Indiana

State University uses the office of Student Health Promotion deal with this sensitive issue that affects students going through school. Student health promotion is vital to all institutions. Poor student health is a chief reason for student dropout rates increasing. It is virtually impossible to complete a university education without physical, mental and emotional health support. This is truer today in an era when people are in university when they are still in their teen age. This is a wonderful place that I would encourage students to go and take advantages about their health promotion, and ask whatever they want to know about.

Women's resources Center (April 25, 2017):

There was a movie in that area to attend the movie, and I take the chance to ask them about the place. This facility strives to empower, educate and protect people of all genders in their quest for identity and self-expression. Students can find resources and help on gender issues, sexual violence and relationship challenges. Women are the weaker sex and are vulnerable to violence and maltreatment physically and emotionally. The Indiana State University recognizes the fragile nature of female students and uses this faculty to help them with the unique challenges that meet them. This facility was created following the rich history of the Indiana State University's women and female student. The Women's Resources center is the University's way to continue to enrich their presence there. This enter is located on the 7th floor of the Hulman Memorial State Union.

Planned Parenthood (February 24, 2017):

Students need to know what it means to be a parent. Planned Parenthood is an important part of student's ability to finish their courses and graduate successfully. Students can find information and solutions about IUDs, morning after pills, birth control, STDs and abortion. It is difficult being a parent while pursuing education. It becomes more difficult to be a parent when taking care of an unplanned child. Most students get in this situation unknowingly and are unable to deal with it well enough to complete their education. The Planned Parenthood Center saves students a lot of trouble which they probably would not be able to handle by themselves. Parenthood is an issue that cannot be solved with peer counseling. There has to be a clear and direct experienced solution to getting pregnant or contracting sexually transmitted diseases while in school. I went there because I would like to know much about how I planned parenthood in the future cause I am thinking after graduating I will get marry. Also, I want to teach my family about it and try to help my sister how she can deal with her husband and kids.

Crisis Pregnancy Center (February 24, 2017)

After we spent two days talking about Conception, pregnancy, and birth, I went to Crisis Pregnancy Center to learn more about the topic that we already discuss in class. The Crisis Pregnancy Center at Wabash Valley helps individuals who get pregnant while in crisis. Patients can visit the main center on 530 Wabash Avenue. The services at the Crisis Pregnancy Center include urine pregnancy tests, blood pregnancy tests, giving accurate information on the difference options around the pregnancy situation. Pregnancy tests relieve students and other women and couples of the anxiety of knowing or not knowing about being pregnant. Sexual interaction may lead to pregnancy but it can also cause people to contract STIs or HIV. CPC helps give medical and therapeutic help to people who contract these diseases. Information on the development of fetuses, birth control and concerning men who think they have impregnated women can be found at this facility.

Positive Link (March 10, 2017):

The office of Student Health Promotion at the Indiana State University is a vital element of the institution. This office offers HIV testing and counseling to students free of charge. Positive link is made possible at the Indiana State University's collaboration with UAP Clinic. This area of student health promotion is operated by a loyal staff of 6 people. Anyone that needs assessment can find the staff for resources on how to find solutions around HIV. There are different resources for the various topic areas where visitors can be informed at the campus location, online or at events. The events include some on peer education, marijuana awareness, wellness and sobriety all of which affect people's sexual behavior. Sexual behavior determines graduation rates indirectly. Students who contract HIV or pregnancy or both situations deal with so much that the temptation to leave school is irresistible.

Council on Domestic Violence (March 6, 2017):

This facility has the mission to eliminate domestic violence and assault on sexual grounds. The Council on Domestic Violence intervenes on such issues through empowering individuals who have been abused. Minor children also find therapy and medical attention through this facility. The aim of Council on Domestic Violence is to influence societal change. Male engagement seminars are part of the program where men talk about relationships, sexual violence and domestic abuse. Bar ladies and other people who serve alcoholic drinks in the night must be educated on how to protect themselves and limit their vulnerabilities as Council on Domestic Violence does. The efforts of the Council on Domestic Violence are definitely worth it even if they do not prevent the occurrence of such cases. Intervention helps because victims and perpetrators of domestic violence and sexual violence get medical or psychological assistance.

Vigo County Health Department (April 28, 2017):

Vigo County in Indiana is an interesting place to be. The government provides citizens easy access to government information through government website. The county's complex is located in 121 Oak Street on Terre Haute in Indiana 4780. The agendas of the county include making sure citizens get all required health documentations which are made available on the website. The documents are available at the website document center. Vigo County also holds meetings on health with county commissioners and county meetings for council members. Citizen alerts are also generated by the county government through this platform. Many County governments are adopting the method of using online submission and registration of government related health affairs before they need to visit the physical address of government offices.
