Autobiographical Story

I do remember the January 6, 2021 events that occurred on the US Capitol that wanted to remove the government of Biden by causing chaos. I remember that at the time I had been researching about the Iranian revolution. The similarities between the American and Iranian revolutions were huge. First of all, the Iranian revolution was an event that was planned under chaos in which individual Protestants tried and succeeded in removing a legitimate Shah government at the time. There were many revolutions on the American soil that were only focus on removing a legitimate government. On the same token, the Iranian revolution was an event in which the revolts tried to remove a government that had been legitimate at the time.

I did not support the removal of a legitimate American government under the Trump guidance. The supporters of Trump had major differences with the Iranian supporters. It is clear that the Iranian supporters had been protesting about a government they represented in the top echelons of government. It was evident that there were many ideals that were aimed at ensuring that the Trump government had won. While it was clear that oppression had contributed to the advancement of the Iranian government, the case of America did not have any form of oppression from the government. The fight for democracy has always been one in which liberty and freedoms of humanity have always been tried to be won in the state. The need to ensure that the fight for democratic ideals had been achieved is one of the major principles that would improve the win in the states for the people.

I believe that the American Revolution under Trump was leading to the advancement of minority rule, unnecessary violence and false information. The advancement of these ideals would lead to creation of a nation based on conspiracy and one in which democratic ideals would not be used to govern the people. Conspirational thinking and false news have also been used as part of ideas that would help to advance the conservative agenda over time. However, the failure to adopt a policy in which there would be promotion of ideals and equal rights is one that has continued to fail the people for many years. The insurrection of violence in America only aimed at bringing violence as a democratic ritual for the state.

To sum it up, it is clear that U.S Capitol has grown to become a symbol of American freedom. Any violence against the U.S capitol is a symbol that the country wants to return into chaos. The use of violence in the Capitol is a demonstration that majoritarian democracy continues to fail over the years. It is clear that the government has continued to engage in actions aimed at overthrowing an illegitimate government that did not represent them any longer. History shows that the Iranian revolution helped to bring change to the American soil while it provided an opportunity for replacement of an old empire with a new one in which theocracy and democracy were major ideals. If any revolution has to work in America, it has to be supported by the majority people who rule the country so as to provide the change that is needed in the country.
