

Please watch the video and comment one at least one thing you found interesting from the video in a paragraph form. After you have made your post, respond to at least one of your classmates.

- Initial post is due Thursday with the classmate response

<https://youtu.be/RNftCCwAol0?list=PL8dPuuaLjXtMwmepBjTSG593eG7ObzO7s>

Classmate response : Marlyne Taja Nguyen

One thing that stood out to me was that it would take more time and money to ship something via direct overland routes prior to the market revolution. Now a days it takes a couple of days to a week to get something that we ordered, but back then it could take 3 months and that would be considered the fastest route. Another thing that amazed me was that industrial production would begin in factories, but then be sent to farms for people to finish in their houses. I assumed that once factories were developed that productions would be started, completed, and shipped out from there; maybe that is because growing up all I knew was going to work and not having work sent to you.