Factory Farming and The Global Food Crisis

Throughout the world, many things contribute to the Global Food Crisis. One very specific topic is Factory Farming. I plan to investigate this topic, research educational articles, and put together an informative essay. The Essay will state how Factory Farming contributes and affects the crisis.

This topic is debatable and controversial on many levels. Factory farming and animal rights advocates have lengthy debates over the animal's care. Farmers, debate that their lives, and wellbeing are dependent on the animals they are farming. Animal rights advocates state that the animals are grown faster than they would naturally. Global Food Crisis activist believe that the factory farms are destroying the water sources that are already scares. This topic is debatable because without the farmers, animals and their products, our quick availability to food would be halted. The "right now" food industry would have to change their ways. However, the aftermath of the factory farms seems to be affecting more people. Water sources in underprivileged counties is at an alarming rate. Children, wives, and families are going without because the water isn't available. Some counties have a limit to the food and water you can consume. Along with the debates come the spread of viruses from animals to humans. With the large number of animals in the small proximity, the spread of viruses is easily done. Factory farming can serve as bridge of viruses from animals to humans. These viruses cause diseases and death to counties whose people are already malnourished, dehydrated and without medical care.

I will be looking for scientific articles that are certified and not opinionated. These types of articles can offer fact-based information without a specific stance on the topic. Scientific articles will allow me to offer information with support behind it. Leaving the counter arguments with little to no stability. Along with scientific articles, journals will also be utilized. For example, inquiriesjournal.com, humansociety.org, and researchgate.net, offer a variety of journals and information. Journals from different sites will allow me to have all points of view in my topic essay. One of the major websites, worldbank.org, has provided factual, scientific and resource-based information on Factory Farming.

Factory Farming is interesting to me because I did not believe in it's affect on the Global Food Crisis. The small, but informative, research I have obtained has boosted my curiosity on its affects to the world. Coming from the farming life, I have obtained only the information passed down to me by my family. I have never taken the steps to learn the affects of Factory Faming. This topic to me will be informative and impactful to my current life. It will allow me to be open minded with the effects of Factory Farms to the World. I am a firm believer, that no matter how small we are, we can make a difference. Learning information that I can relate to will make this topic enjoyable for me to type.
