Introduction

The king of Great Britain subjected his people to usurpations and historical repeated injuries by establishing Tyranny in a couple of states and exposing them to several oppression to remain in power. It is irrefutable that, there is a need for people living to forget their political status and think on how the powers of nature and power of God requires them to live. The powers we get to understand that all men were equally created, given common rights which includes life, liberty and happiness. During the times of King of Great Britain a government was to be established based on these rights so that it might protect people and incase it fails then they had a right to replace it.

How was the King of Great Britain oppressive?

There a couple of grievances by his people which remained in vain. In his position, the king did not attempt to assent to laws governing the provision of public goods for the wellbeing of his people and prohibited passing of laws by his Governors. The laws for accommodation of people in large districts and held that, the laws could be passed only and only if such people would relinquish legislatively representative rights. He used his powers and political status to call all legislative bodies at uncomfortable and unusual venues in a bid to distant them from public disposal and this was meant to fatigue them in compliance with the measure he had put in place. This king failed to allow others to be elected and made the legislature have no power exercise annihilation power. Sadly, trade between Great Britain and other parts of world was cut .

According to ¹*Transcript of Declaration of Independence (1776)*, in General Congress, ¹the United States of America appealed to the World's supreme judges for the passage of legislation to be made allowing them to be free and independent states proposing for the dissolution of any political connection with the Great Britain States. This allowed to the for the provisions outlined in the (Transcript of confederation (1777)) which eased the oppressive actions of the Great Britain Government.

According to the Transcript of articles of Confederation (1777), to be free and independent states, all States were required to retain their sovereignty, independence freedom and power while enjoying rights within their jurisdictions as evident in Article II of the (Transcript of confederation (1777)). The states could engage in strong league of friendship and common defense to secure their liberties that bound them together. This could help in safeguarding and cultivating mutual friendship of citizens in various states in the union and embracing freedom of every citizen in economic social and social cultural activities but not limited to the appointment of representatives in various posts at the states levels. Finally it addressed the conduct of democrats in the house of congress during and after session done by proposing for limits of the states in dealing with foreign affairs. This could be applicable in signing of treaties with foreign countries, sending and receiving embassies, imposition of duties and full participation of states in the event of war. The congress required for the engagement of states forces on national matters once called upon and respond to event of a war, where the states should contribute a common treasury to cater for all the expenses.
