Reflections must include a one paragraph summary of the main ideas of the source, followed by your reaction to what the material makes you think about. You can write about anything you want, provided it relates to the source. You can, for example, write about something that moved you in a particular way, something that strikes you as familiar to/different from the present, something that connects to other material you've encountered in the class, or something from your personal life. Or, it could be something else. You have a lot of freedom here.

375 words is about 1.5 pages of text, double spaced, in Word. The previous paragraph is 93 words.
