

Healthcare Today

Medicaid

It is one of the largest sources of medical funding for all people with low income (Sommers, 2017).

It is a federal program which support people of all ages, especially those whose income and resources are little to pay for their own healthcare.

According to Sommers (2017), Medicaid provides a free health insurance to approximately 74 million Americans every year.

This is a federal health insurance plan for who are 65 years and above.

Medicare

The Medicare programs also provide health insurance coverage for young people with certain disabilities and Americans with issues such as permanent kidney failure.

The Medicare Program has four crucial parts namely part A, part B, and part D.

Part A mostly covers inpatients, care in a nursing home, and other home healthcare (it is hospital insurance).

Part B is medical insurance and is very selective because it covers certain doctor's services, medical supplies, and preventive services.

Part D is a coverage for prescriptive drugs including Private-Fee-for-Service Plans, Medicare cost plans, and Medicare medical saving account plans.

Long term Insurance care

The program is flexible because employers can either pay premiums for their employees or make partial payments.

It is a flexible coverage which provides nursing-home care, personal day care, and nursing-home care (Kagan, 2018).

The program is expensive and it only covers a specific amount of money for each day a patient spends in the nursing care.

It is very important to read the Private Pay healthcare cover

It is typically an insurance company, which connects the consumers with the healthcare provider.

This type of healthcare insurance has a policy holder who may pay his own costs or the insurance company may pay all the costs as long as the client will pay all the premiums.

The beauty of this plan is that small business owners can access this program from insurance companies or purchasing groups.
