- 1) As modern readers we may have difficulty with the Greek notion that intentions are unimportant and actions are all that matter (think about Actaeon). What in the nature of the classical gods makes such a world-view comprehensible? For example, what does the Actaeon story tell us about Artemis?
- 2) Some scholars posit that Artemis's virginity is a rejection of male domination, not of sexuality in general. Could you make the same statement about Athena?
- 3) Dionysos is a latecomer god whose worship is at first resisted. Why might this be so, and what might be some of the reasons that he is different from other Classical gods?
