Characteristics of a Good Parent

When Joey and Willy got the news that they were soon going to be parents, they were very excited and could not wait to inform the rest of their family members. However, with all their excitement they realized that while being a parent is one of the most fulfilling human experiences, there was a lot they needed to learn if they were going to be good parents. Being first-time parents, they wanted to be the best parents to their child, and hence they decided to take up a course on parenting at the local church. Joining this course was an indication of their compulsion to learn how to be good parents and ultimately use the knowledge they would acquire to bring up their child. For first time parents like Joey and Willy, and for other parents that wish to be good parents, it is important to realize that being a good parent goes beyond the natural instinct of love that parents feel. For one to be a good parent, they must be able to overcome the challenges that come with parenting, show affection to their children, provide for their children's safety, and identify and listen to the concerns of their children.
