Marx in SOHO is a catching story of Marx's life, his view on society, and the quest for radical change. Howard, the writer of the exciting history of Marx, depicts his voice and the relevant ideas he had for society. Karl Marx spends most of his life working on the manuscripts after obtaining his first degree, which later shaped his political ambitions. Hence, concerning this narrative, some events and conditions influenced Karl Marx's political development.

There existed various social classes that distinguished the rich and the poor in the society. Thus, Howard's voice through Marx predicted the end of class divisions. This comes years after Marx formulated various ideas that later influenced billions of people globally (Ferreira, 2013). Ideally, most people get inspired by Marx's readings. Additionally, Marx was a family man who devoted and loved his children and wife, Jenny. For instance, he arrived in Paris after being invited by the German Philosopher Arnold Ruge. While in Paris, Marx worked on a new magazine known as Deutsch-Französische Jahrbucher. The magazine depicted criticism, witnessed currently.

Marx got also influenced by the communists, Anarchists, Christian socialists, and philosophers. Further, while in Berlin, he spent six years while studying philosophy. The philosophy enabled him to understand things as he saw them as part of an irresistible march of freedom, truth, and reason. While trying to understand these processes, Marx noted that these historical concepts could lead to human freedom. Howard further illustrates how a deep passion for justice drove Marx to the oppressed citizens. Therefore, Howard met Marx's fighting spirit for the new generation and indicate how the current troubles time requires Marx than ever.

Finally, the wage-earning proletarians who were the revolution agents strengthened Marx's urge in the political-economic issues. Marx, together with Engels, observed that the nation's wealth depended on the application of labor rather than the resources (Ferreira, 2013).

Being driven by economic development, Marx strived to work harder for he valued human beings. Additionally, Marx predicted how capitalism would destroy itself, thus developed communism. Hence, Howard identified that just as the capitalist class had interfered with the feudal aristocracy, it eliminated the proletariat.
