Nursing Trending Issues

The most important trends in legal nursing currently in my clinical practice are increase in the innovative technology in the healthcare system and the nursing shortages in the healthcare system. In conjunction with this, the changes that need to be made to benefit the community are encouragement of specialization in the nursing sector to promote efficiency and proper service delivery to the patients and encourage more people to study nursing education to curb the shortages witnessed in the nursing field. Notably, some nurses find themselves in a legal situation while at work because of the constraints they experience as a result of the nature of their job; therefore, the employment of more nurses and specialization will tremendously improve the quality of service delivery to the community by nurses (Cherry & Jacob, 2016). Moreover, the use of improved technology in the nursing field is beneficial to the community because, through the technology, most diseases can easily be treated within shortest time possible (Grove & Gray, 2018). Such trends and issues are key in improving the health care sector and consequently ensuring a healthy community.

If I had an opportunity to change, I would increase the nurses' salaries and wages by more than 50%. My desire for this form of change is because the healthcare nurses are very critical frontline soldiers in the fight against diseases. Therefore by so doing, they will feel motivated, appreciated and cared for by society. Also, better payment will help reduce industrial actions observed due to poor remuneration (Roux & Halstead, 2018). From the data of Texas nursing homeownership, it is a trend that sole proprietorship of nursing homes affects the quality of nursing since it depends on the owner who is the sole provider for the services (Stevenson et al., 2013). This means that if owner is subjected to any financial constrain, automatically, the services in homes are affected.
