Political cultures refer to the shared beliefs, values, and behavior of a government. All citizens do not accept a country's culture, but everyone is affected by the beliefs and values since it's used in governance. Texas has three different political cultures discussed below.

Moralistic political culture. This culture is believed that the government works towards the good of all citizens. Therefore, citizen's participation is a shared value in this culture to achieve a common good. The moralistic culture is most dominant in California and Minnesota.

Individualistic political culture. This culture is based on the belief that the government is a market place that gives its citizens a chance to better their welfare. Citizens are encouraged to participate in their achievement, while government activity is encouraged to create private
