To Whom It May Concern,

It gives me great pleasure to write this recommendation letter of (name of the student), who is pursuing an application to join the Master's program in nursing at the Charles R. Drew University of Medicine. She is a registered nurse whom I had the privilege to work with for six months at XYZ Hospital.

Based on my evaluation of the candidate during the time that we worked together, I find her to be very dedicated to her profession. She is highly dependable and hence, trustworthy. Moreover, her analytical skills are evident in the way she undertakes an in-depth analysis of the situation at hand.

During her placement, the candidate stood shoulders above the rest due to her high level of creativity in ensuring that patients received quality care. She takes a lot of initiative in all that she has set her mind on and is also highly inquisitive, especially with her superiors. I also found the candidate to be highly knowledgeable of the scope of her work. Consequently, she is a good team player who gets along well with the patients and her colleagues.

She is not afraid to exercise her authority when the situation demands so. It goes to show that the candidate possesses admirable leadership skills. Moreover, the candidate is very eloquent in both written and verbal communication skills. These are essential prerequisites for the nursing profession.

Her personality is also likeable primarily because of her positive outlook towards work, life and society. She takes positive criticism from her peers and superiors in good strides and is also open to receiving advice from others. These skills enable her to make invaluable contributions to health care teams in the workplace.

As the candidate is highly committed to her profession and actively participates in group activities, I feel she capable of handling the Master's program whose application she is seeking. I am optimistic that this recommendation will serve as a bridge to her yearning for furthering her studies. In case you have any more clarifications to make regarding the candidate, do not hesitate to get in touch with me at the earliest. Thank you in advance.

Sincerely,
