

your enterprise fuel:

You have all the basic building blocks of success. You are motivated, have a lot of self-belief and are willing to learn and change as you need to. This is important for you to know. Your challenge is to make sure you use all of this “enterprise fuel”™ to make things happen and to achieve what is important to you. Are you using your energy as effectively as you could?

Motivation and Drive

You seem to be very motivated. You want to be successful. You want to get on and do well and be seen to do well. Allow people to acknowledge you for the effort you put in. This hunger and desire will get you going and keep you going when things get tough and course work maybe becomes more challenging. Others may struggle, but you keep going “ this is great at school and when you get a job. The most successful people are those who work hard.

Capacity to Self Determine

You like to make things happen and believe you can. This is great and underpins success. What you achieve at school and later in life, is down to you! Your determination and self-belief may be because you enjoy what you do, see it as a way of achieving your goals, or simply enabling you to have even more fun? Keep this up - it’s a great success factor. You are wise to avoid the trap of looking for excuses “ take control of your own life.

Willingness to Learn

You seem to have a very positive attitude towards learning and changing. This is excellent considering you are still at school. Every year you are asked to do new things, learn new skills “ the more you do this, the better. Your attitude enables you to learn new skills, adapt to new challenges and make the most of your career and life. Remember that sometimes things can be difficult and that is a time when your new skills will really help you.

enterprise style

Introvert / Extrovert

Whilst you are willing to work alone, it seems that you prefer to spend time with your friends. You will always need to spend some time working alone (eg studying) but to achieve (and get a good job), you will have to spend time with new and different people. Indeed you may well be suited to a job working with people. Enjoy your “people”™ skills and use them to build the relationships that will help you get on. You are probably a good communicator - so use it.

Starter / Finisher

You prefer to finish things rather than get caught up in a new course or task that might distract you. If you have been set a task you like to see it through to the end. You have probably noticed, not everyone is like this. You seem to know when to stick with a current project or assignment and when to move onto something new. This will be of great value, as you will deliver what people are asking for “ often to course leaders and teachers.

Explorer / Focused

Your strength is that you have the ability to stay focused upon one task or assignment. You are also probably quite good at organising yourself, planning your time well and avoiding distraction, as long as you are not doing too much. This is great and will help you succeed. You may need to be the organiser in teams. Rather than be concerned about the future and what happens next year “ allow yourself to look forward to it with excitement. You may be an excellent strategic thinker.

Opportunistic / Risk Avider

Success at school is all about doing what is required and expected whilst at the same time exploring opportunities and discovering what your future options are. You are aware of this and are unlikely to take risks that would get in the way of doing as well as you can at school. It is also worth opening your eyes to opportunities that you may not currently be considering. You may be the person who ensures teams don’t miss deadlines and deliver what is expected and on time.

encouragers, support and obstacles

Self

Your positive self-belief and confidence is excellent and will help you to succeed. When you are studying it is this quality that helps you push through barriers and overcome hurdles.

Self-awareness, knowing what you are good at and what you are not so good at, ensures that you will use your skills and abilities well. It is important that you don't become overconfident and lose sight of some of the difficult challenges that face everyone as they go through education. Be confident, but keep your feet on the ground.

Social

You seem to be surrounded by people who are helpful, supportive and able to provide you with useful advice and guidance. Excellent. Whilst our success is very much determined upon our own efforts and energies, the support that families and friends provide, makes a massive difference. Although you have access to this network of support, it is worth asking how often you take advantage from it and how much you give back in return. Make sure you maintain the richness of these relationships.

Skills

You believe that you have a good range of skills to enable you get on and achieve. Skill is one of the most important success factors and the major question for you is, to what extent do you use and apply your skills in ways that will help you succeed in your studies and advance your career? If you see yourself as having good communication, problem-solving etc skills, how well do you use these to achieve success within the school?

Resources

Finding enough time and space to focus your attention is often an under estimated skill. It will help you to balance the demands of school work with the other things you want to do. You seem to feel that you have just about enough time and space, but that this can be stretched at times "you can be stretched at times. Make sure you allocate sufficient time to the things that are important to you now and will help you in the future.

your teamrole is:

Constructive Organiser

Constructive Organiser

Constructive Organisers hold things together. They seek to bring the necessary direction and structure without which projects fail, resource is wasted and things just don't get done. These people are good at jobs involving project management, setting up systems and directing people, as long as they don't become too controlling.

Risk Manager

Risk Managers protect. They make sure all the good work and effort leads to deserved success. They guard against unwise decisions and ask necessary questions to avoid making predictable mistakes. They have an aversion to unnecessary risk-taking, can hold projects and businesses together and are comfortable in jobs with an element of security.

Concluding Achiever

Concluding Achievers prioritise getting the job done. They often have a practical focus. Finishing projects and delivering what has been asked for is what drives them. They ensure targets are clear and achieved and are well suited to work that places a strong emphasis upon getting the job done. Occasionally they don't involve other people enough.

Engager

Engagers tend to know lots of people and can be quite sociable. They seem to pride themselves upon building a network of useful contacts and knowing who needs to be known. They are often friendly and good to have in teams. They excel in work which involves team work, meetings, getting out and about, but at times can find it difficult to find focus.

Independent Driver

Independent Drivers have a preference for working alone or in small groups and making their own decisions. This can lead to the development of specialist skills and a willingness to get on with a job without requiring the involvement of others. Specialist technical work and self-employment is a career route, as long as they ensure they involve other people.

Energiser

Energisers bring enthusiasm and energy to new projects and challenges. They initiate action and get things moving! They will inspire others to get involved and make things happen. They take on leading roles and like projects and jobs where they generate ideas, start things and then work with a team to make it happen. They can sometimes take on too much.

Opportunist

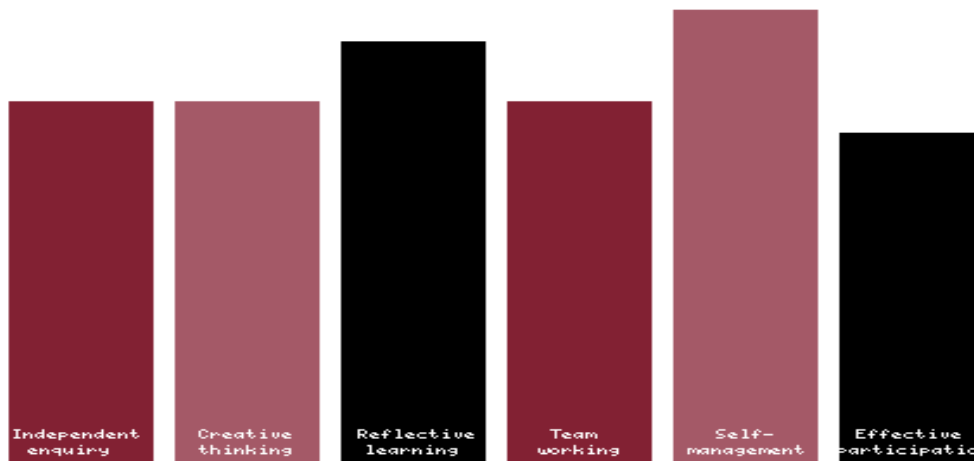

Opportunists are spontaneous and can be a bit scatty. They see many ways forward, but aren't always sure which one to take. Opportunists can be great entrepreneurs as long as they eventually decide what they want to do and focus upon it. Careers with a certain amount of freedom and choice may appeal.

Creative Brainstormer

Creative Brainstormers are brilliant ideas people who like to explore all options. They can live in their heads and sometimes be a bit chaotic. They are unlikely to accept established ways of doing things and will see solutions that others do not. They can be excellent in roles that require ideas, novel solutions, design and creativity.

personal learning and thinking skills:

Independent Enquiry

Thinking problems and issues through is a quality you describe yourself as having. You like to collect information, put it all together and work out solutions to a whole range of different issues and challenges. This is a quality that will support your learning and also your career development as life is an endless series of challenges, some academic, some work-based and some life based.

Creative Learning

Your ability to think “outside the box”™ and come up with novel ideas and ways of looking at things is a real strength. Make sure you use it well by asking questions, being confident to say what you think and work out solutions that others might not see, but could be really useful.

Reflective Learning

You seem to really enjoy the whole process of learning and growing. You like to try new things and receive feedback from people. This is what education and learning is all about and the more you open yourself up to feedback from a range of different people, the more you will learn and grow and this will really help you at school, at work and in your ongoing career.

Team Working

Your ability to work well in team situations is a great strength and will serve you well. The more you are able to proactively communicate with the people you work with the better. Keep talking and sharing ideas and make sure you involve other people, as the strength of a team is more than the sum of the parts!

Self management

You describe yourself as someone who is organised, able to balance a range of different demands and skilled at getting things done. This is great. It will help you a great deal if you ensure you are applying your skills and talents to those tasks and challenges that are really important to you and will help you achieve.

Effective Participation

It is important that we spend devote some time to issues that don't just affect us but also affect other people. You seem to be the type of person who could get involved in this. This is really good as it is active people like you who could make a difference.
