CONGRESS AND PRESIDENT

Question 1

Today, many bills have been created to become laws in a day. Of course, there is a process that these bills have to go through to become laws. Ideas for laws come from many places: citizens, the President, executive, legislative and government offices, and governors and members of Congress themselves. Before a bill becomes law, it must be approved by both houses of Congress and turned into law by the President of the United States. This process can take almost a year and, if not removed, will be discarded, and you will have to go through the whole process again. Many citizens are upset by Congress for its inefficiency and also for the time required for the operation.

In all social sectors of the world, Violence in the workplace is a common danger. In the United States and many other developed and developing countries, worker abuse is present at high health rates. Violence in the workplace in health care has brought significant disadvantages to the United States, including loss of life and financial costs, including service costs and labor costs. This is the best time for the US federal government to go through Congress Bill RH 1309-116 (2019-2020) after the enormous losses and side effects and introduce any necessary implementation of the bill to reduce losses. Health Specialists bear them. Health violence in the workplace affects health facilities and events and, more likely, employees (Wyatt, Anderson & Van, 2016). Direct interaction with aggressive patients by doctors and nurses, comprehensive management. According to the World Health Organization, about three to eight percent of health workers experience Violence in the workplace. Others are exposed or threatened with verbal aggression. Most perpetrators of Violence are visitors and patients (Wyatt, Anderson & Van, 2016). In situations of conflict and disaster, healthcare workers can be targeted by political or collective Violence.

When the Civil War ended and the Union's victory seemed inevitable, President Abraham Lincoln and Congress began to think about the future Union Assembly. A congressman led by revolutionary Republicans considered Lincoln's Restoration Proposal, which incorporated the ten-percent proposal. cent, a little bland. The latter tried to judge and weaken potential uprisings in the southern states. The 10% agreement incorporated the Lincoln Reconstruction Plan, which stated that a southern state could be readmitted to the Union.

The Wade-Davis bill, presented by congressmen Benjamin F. Swim and Henry W. Davis, was a bill to force severe and reformist reconstruction measures on defeated Confederate states (Oakes, 2007). Supported in 1864 by Congress, it was rejected by President Lincoln before the Civil War. Before his state could ¹ join the Union, the Wade-Davis bill required half of white voters to vote in all southern states. Congress (2007, Oakes). Each country will also have to build a different state.

In July 1864, Congress passed the Wade-Davis bill, but President Lincoln rejected it and never became a law. However, it complemented it as a model for stronger recovery recommendations than President Johnson's 10% work. This Congressional procedure was reflected in a package of confirmed bills, called the Reconstruction Laws of 1867 (Oakes, 2007). The bills isolated the south in five military zones and required inspection of the legality of government troops. . They pressured states to confirm the fourteenth amendment.
