Media Reality Vs Personal Experience

The author argues that the mainstream media exhibition's impact on an individual's perception of the real-world reality is profound only if the targeted audience has less or no experience with the issue or topic in the real world (Crowell, 2017). Simply put, the author emphasizes the fact that the possibility of an individual mistaking the media advertised works for real-world realism is higher, lest he or she commands adequate individual experience to counteract its effects, yet sometimes those with real-world experience are not resistant. In connection to the past articles read in class, this article draws its conclusion on the target topic from manifold sources to construct an argument as well as establish a comprehensive value of sources dissected.

² “The way that the world is represented in the media greatly influences our understanding and beliefs about reality”. I strongly agree with the sentiments in this quote and it is no surprise to me that the mediated world influence on an individual could be so gross on his or her psychological understanding of real-world authenticity. Subsequently, in considering the values as well as conducts necessary to propel our modern youths in the correct direction, the impact of negative media influences is bound to warp the aforementioned expectations. The latter is a rock-solid way of things as all mediated reality is geared towards influencing the community through sharing content with dogmatic perception.

Synthesis refers to the act of applying different ideas as well as text fetched from multiple sources and combining them to draw a novel conclusion about a specific topic. To develop an effective synthesis the author should sight the main arguments, plots as well as content of the selected sources (Vrba, 2017). Also, the outline of the synthesized writing should be clear enough to present the items with which connection will be made as well as close with a declaration reflecting the author's general viewpoint of developed writing. Similarly, a good synthesis should use a solitary comparison otherwise contrast point for each paragraph. Lastly, in its conclusion, the author should complete the synthesis by reaffirming the primary proposition in the introduction.
