Discussion Questions

The idea that the Senate should filter the output of the sometimes hasty House was wise. The House consists of representatives who must consider the public opinion while the Senate has educated people who apply analysis in making decisions. The Constitutional directive that the Senate has to go through the House's ideas is therefore wise because the decision-making process incorporates both the public views and proper reasoning. Chances of making wrong decisions are thus minimized, making it the right choice. The Electoral College is benefiting because it ensures that all regions in the nation take part in choosing the president (Steadman, 2019). The competitors are therefore forced to address issues of all areas to win in the elections. However, the system does not consider the public's will in selecting the president. The United States has more than 300 million residents, but only 538 of them decide the winner. In my opinion, the Electoral College should be eliminated to ensure that the people of their choice lead people.

The most crucial consideration when placing judge as well as justices position at federal level is integrity. The people hired should, at all times, do what is right, regardless of the outcomes. It is a vital consideration because it would curb discrimination in the ruling, one of the significant issues in the criminal system. The people employed should judge as per the law other than color and social classes. Own motivation affects interactions with teams. When one is passionate about the work, they identify other's strengths and weaknesses, making it easy to relate. As at that, managers should understand the aspects that motivate individual workers so that their expectations are met to avoid turn out or resistance, among other issues (Karell & Widlund, 2019).
