The Concept of Hell

In this homework I will work on the first option whereby I will talk about specific explanation of hell in regard to my tradition. The concept of hell has been understood in different doctrines in life. Growing up, I was treated to a solid Christian concept of hell. Right from my Sunday school days in our church, I was made to understand that hell is a place where the fire never stops. It is on this fire that the sinful will burn forever and never get a glimpse of salvation. In my Christianity, we believe that the devil and his demons will perish in hell, too, like the sinners. Dante, on the contrary, depicts the devil as the governor of hell whose capacity equates that of God.

In Christianity, hell kills, unlike heaven, where we will live to eternity. Life for Christians does not end with interment. Even though it is hard to imagine, life after death is imminent. It would be a time when everyone would get a fair judgment and receive a prize for his purposeful life on earth. I do affirm presence of hell and heaven since it brings about the concept of choices. Dante is picturing hell as an ominous cavern in which sinners are classified by their wrongdoings; each of the caverns has its own custom-fitted brand of torment. For example, those blamed of covetousness have melted metal poured down their throats while those liable of fury are compelled to battle one another perpetually (Dante, 232). There is the bottom of the red hot hole where the devil bites human bodies, all the while bathing in destroyed souls that are obediently blended by other demons.

In conclusion, my understanding of hell remains solid, and I will teach it to others in all my life. Our tradition of believing that hell is a place raging in fire will remain and I will pass it across generations so that they can make a choice of living a holy life. Such a life that would please God and secure them a place in heaven.
