Huyler Literature

Huyler (2002) says, "During the last days of his life, Mr. Garcia was watched all the time...he said that there was nothing left for him" (Pg. 63). This is a clear depiction of how autonomy is depleted in the life and hope for Mr. Garcia. He was an addict of drugs to a point that he got contained in the circle of drugs running through his body and mind. Garcia is described as having no personal freedom. The drugs determine his habit; he cannot move out but gets ill randomly. He is of medium age, 45 years of age, but cannot fulfill his life wishes; he has to be looked after day and night.

Huyler says, "I will do a pregnancy test, have you noticed any discharge?...I need you to pee in this cup and then I will come with a nurse to do pelvic test" (Pg. 123). The nurses in the laboratory unit are much engaged in their work with a passion for helping poor patients. The process through which these nurses are random in round checking their patients is exceptional. They display fidelity to appoint that they are sacrificing their time to respond to emergency calling from patients and those checking on patients. Fidelity has been a privilege for most of the involved medical students in the story.

Huyler says, "don't worry Anna, we won't tell your mom, nobody will know" (Pg. 124). This is a display of confidentiality; the nurses in excellent service to a girl named Anna assures her of security with health information. The girl suspects that she is pregnant and is worried about her mother. If she gets to know, Anna will be in trouble. With work fidelity and confidentiality measures, Huyler and the acting nurse assures Anna that no information will get disclosed relating to her attendance at the hospital and the pregnancy results. This confidentiality makes Anna smile even at a situation she considered a crying disaster before.

Huyler asks, "does she have any medical problem at all?...no the father says anticipating to the questions.....she is left with mother at home who takes oral hypoglycemic sugar pills" (Pg. 129). This is a depiction of veracity. The nurse in service shows professional contention in her communication. The questions that she asks are professional with interest to the patient at hand. The mother and father to the patient girl are fluent in explaining their daughter's behavior and respond to the nurse questions efficiently. Huyler proceeds and interrogates the child's mother regarding the recent habit of the patient. In return, the patient's parents give credible answers relating to family background; they also air their views concerning the child's state. The information becomes helpful in the nursing operations.
