A vampire is a supernatural being that is described mythically. It feeds on blood and therefore roams around the earth at night, searching for blood. Vampires are mostly linked with Dracula by many people. The reason vampires roam at night is that they are affected by light, making them weak and unable to see. They are believed to have supernatural strengths, which makes them feared. It is thought that a vampire cannot see its image in a mirror. Their fingers are sharp fangs which they use to kill people and suck their blood. Once a vampire pierces a human being, they turn to vampires too.

After reading "The judge's house," I realize that Malcolmson is a lonely person. He does not want the association with his friends. Even when deciding on looking for a place to go and do his studies, he does not want to involve his friends. He fears that they will give him several suggestions and therefore opts to follow his heart. He travels to a place where a desolate house attracts him.

The story in the fiction "in the vault" is startling. Coffins are associated with but omens. When birch gets a stack, I find myself panting due to fear. I connect the story with the vampires, in the midst of coffins, the mid rings about the possibility of the dead awakening. At first, I associated the title with vaults in the bank. Upon reading, my expectation betrays me after realizing the story is about vaults in the coffin. Birch shocks me when he cuts the feet of sawyer so that he can fit in the coffin.
