Passage of The Second Amendment Sanctuary by Several States

The current constitutional issue in the United States of America news is the passage of the second amendment sanctuary by several states. For example, in Wisconsin, the Senate has passed the second amendment sanctuary, which intends to restrict federal gun laws (Marley & Karnopp, 2021). The issue of individuals owning weapons has become a tremendous challenge to several states in the United States because of the immense restriction of the federal gun control laws. Guns need to be controlled to ensure individuals' safety in America. Similarly, not all individuals that handle weapons can protect themselves because some can easily harm themselves. Gun rights is currently a contested constitutional issue that needs to be addressed. Turret et al. (2020) stated that states that pass Second Amendment Sanctuaries oppose the gun safety regulations by viewing it as an unconstitutional limitation of their rights.

Moreover, although the Wisconsin state senate passed the bill governor Tony Evers wants to stop federal gun laws and is unlikely to sign it because he has presented hesitations concerning redistricting regulation (Marley & Karnopp, 2021). Furthermore, federal gun laws were implemented because of the increased risk to the general public as well as suicide prevention. Nevertheless, several other states have found second amendment sanctuaries unconstitutional because state laws cannot override federal laws. Second Amendment Sanctuaries issue should be handled in a constitutional perspective because it does not stand with the set-off laws. After all, they are disrespecting the supremacy clause within article 6 of the United States constitution. The clause states that federal laws and constitutions outdo all the laws and constitutions (Turret et al., 2020). Thus, through not abiding by the federal gun control regulations, the state will be permitting every person a chance to have a weapon easily.

Although the supporters of second amendment sanctuary argue based on larger administrative representations concerning the appropriate balance of authority between the state and local administration. The capacity of larger governments to induce obedience from sanctuary influences and a significant outline of the second amendment itself. Therefore, as a supreme court judge, I would decide the issue based on the authority of the federal gun laws. First, it is important to know the reason for gun regulation laws to be developed; it aimed to reduce gun violence and increase protection to the citizens as well held in dealing with illegal firearms (Siegel & Blocher, 2019). Therefore, since the constitution was developed to protect the citizens, it is important to ensure their well-being is also considered through gun regulations. Second Amendment Sanctuaries will stop the firearm regulations, allowing easy access of guns in the localities, hence being against the Second Amendment. The mentally ill can access firearms because there will be no background checks done, creating a dangerous environment that everyone can obtain a firearm. To handle the issue, the federal government must develop an environment that will make people follow the federal gun regulations laws. Also, state administration should ensure to handle people that do not observe firearm regulations appropriately. The observation of the constitutional second amendment and the 6th article can be achieved by the federal and state administrations working together.
