

Topic :Fluency Disorders in Children

There are so many different types of speech and language disorders found among children such as structure or shape of the muscles and bones or damage to the brain and nerves. For my final paper I've decided to talk about fluency in speech disorders rather than articulation, fluency and voice. Fluency is when a child has a problem with how sentences and words flow in sentences. The child might repeat words or pause while saying a sentence. The child might also stutter due to a fluency disorder.

Introduction

Your introduction should inform the reader as to what you are investigating (i.e., your topic approved by me) and why you are interested in this topic; which reading/discussion/life experience brought you to pay attention to such phenomenon.

Background

Give details of what is already known about the topic (e.g. For a study investigating language development, what are the typical stages children experience, what are linguistic phenomena associated with each stage? It could be your textbook, other books or academic journal when giving background.)

Present study

State your research focuses (in other words, the specific aspect of your topic that you want to elaborate further in your paper), based on prior research that has been done (as reported in your sources).

Body (title this section as you wish based on your research)

This section should contain your findings, organized in a coherent manner. Figures and Tables should be labeled properly (see Figure 1 and Table 1 below). Figures should appear after they are mentioned and explained in the text. They should also be given a description, as Figure 1 and Table 1 are, below the image and above the table. You can refer figures and tables in your paper by referring 'As Fig. 1 shows...', 'Table 1 presents' or in the parenthesis 'the difference was clear (Fig. 1)', 'Each developmental stage shows different characteristics (Table 1)'.

Conclusion and Discussion (you could separate these two sections if you have a lot to summarize or discuss)

Here, summarize what you've found during your research and discuss the implications/importance of your study (what you've found). Are your findings consistent with prior report? Interesting areas of future investigation are typically included, as well.

References

Any references cited should be listed in alphabetical order in APA format.

For full-credit, be sure to cite at least 3 academic sources in your paper (usually Background or Body is the good place to cite other sources).

Use APA style when you cite (in-text citation) and list them in the Reference section check the website below to see what APA style is like:

Another very useful website is: <http://www.citationmachine.net/apa/cite-a-book/manual/>.

After you input the source's information (title, author, etc.) this "citation machine" will produce a perfectly formatted APA citation listing that you can copy and paste into your Reference section.

*Make sure your paper includes a page number as below
