Personality Disorders

Personality disorders should be considered mental disorders because they comprise a long-term sequence of reasoning and behaviors that are obstinate and unhealthy. Therefore, individuals will have challenges in their normal daily functioning, affecting their work and relationship. Yes, the label of disorders enhances the lack of responsibility for maladaptive behaviors. The stigma related to the labels can affect the suitable provision of care and an individual's readiness to seek care.

Narcissist personality disorder has several key characteristics, including self-preservation, essential to protect an individual from being harmed. Another characteristic is the art of presenting themselves and good politicians. Individuals with this disorder are faced with several challenges. The first challenge is taking the authority part and choosing to overcompensate, over safeguard, and fight back because of their devaluation during childhood (Fiann). Another challenge is that most of these entrepreneurs are opportunistic and can prefer to progress cruelly, such as breaking the law. The potential benefits help the entertainment industry because they can quickly learn to present themselves, and people take it as attractive to listen to them. Also, one likes to look at them since the respect from the outside enhances self-preservation and authority. Also, narcissistic individuals are promising entrepreneurs (Fiann). The strengths of narcissistic personality disorder are to aid in indicating the correct setting when it comes to avaricious the intricacy and the upbringing of self-preservation. Another strength is the aid in establishing the healing process because it would assist one to realize that they were extremely devalued and chose to safeguard themselves.

The video has altered my perspective of personality disorders because I have understood that it is just an indication of an individual personality and not a mental disorder. They can also perform essential things those normal individuals are unable to. For instance, narcissistic individuals can communicate and appear better in public. Yes, it will affect how I perceive the individual's maladaptive expression because it has provided positive perspectives about the patients and thus will concentrate on the gift wounds.
