Use the Monroe Motivated Sequence Organizational Pattern for your speech outline.

A Sample Outline Using Monroe's Motivated Sequence

Monroe's Motivated Sequence is an organizational pattern for a Problem-Solution Speech or a Persuasive Speech on a Proposition of Policy. There are 5 steps in the sequence: Attention, Need, Satisfaction, Visualization, and Action. For your benefit, the outline is labeled to indicate which part relates to each of the steps in Monroe's Motivated Sequence. If you choose to use this pattern for your outline, you do not need to label the parts of the outline according to the steps in the sequence.

Specific Purpose:

To persuade my audience that the United States should act now to protect its citizens against electronic invasions of their personal privacy.

Thesis:

The loss of personal privacy in our electronic society is a serious problem that requires decisive action.

Introduction:

[ATTENTION]

[NEED]

Would you let a perfect stranger examine your medical files, peek at your personal finances, eavesdrop on your phone calls, or invade other aspects of your private life? Yet all of these are happening as a result of privacy-invading technology by businesses and government agencies. The erosion of personal privacy has become one of the most serious problems facing Americans in our high tech, electronic age. Today, I would like to explain the extent of this problem and encourage you to support a solution to it.

I.

The use of electronic data gathering by business and government poses a serious threat to personal privacy.

- A. Businesses and government agencies have compiled massive amounts of information on the personal lives of most Americans.

[SATISFACTION]

- B. There are few laws protecting Americans against the gathering or misuse of personal information by businesses and government agencies.

II.

The problem could be greatly reduced by the passage of federal privacy laws.

- A. These laws should impose strict controls on the collection of personal information by businesses and government agencies.

[VISUALIZATION]

- B. These laws should include stiff penalties on anyone who uses personal information for unauthorized purposes.

III.

Similar laws have worked in other countries and can work in the United States.

- A. The practicality of privacy laws has been demonstrated by their success in almost all the countries of Western Europe.

- B. If the U.S. had such laws, you would once again have control over your medical files, financial records, and other kinds of personal information.

Conclusion: The threat to personal privacy is a growing problem. Current laws fail to protect us from the electronic gathering strategies of the government and private companies. So I urge you to support privacy legislation by signing the petition I am passing around to be sent to our state's U.S. Senators and Representatives. By enacting new laws similar to those in other countries, we can once again ensure that our private lives remain just that--private. As Congressman Jack Fields has stated, "This is not a Democratic or Republican issue. . . . Privacy is a basic human right."
