Jay Smith versus Shabir Ally video

The analysis highlights on the rational responses presented by Jay Smith. He held a debate with Dr Shibir Ally. The discussion is based on the topic “which is the word of God”. The Bible or is the Quran took effect in Canada on 27th September 2014 as has depicted Jay illustrating some glaring errors as well as bold arguments short of due attentiveness.

Jay criticized the Quran on two perspective. First, he viewed that the manuscript of each Quran appeared to be different from each other as it composed varied information. Besides, is the Egyptian publication from 1924 of the Quran that is currently being used that has appear vary from each other. Secondly, Jay argued that the Quran is composed of narratives copied from different sources that were witnessed to exist before. Dealing with the second assertion, it is evident that the debate by Sidney Griffith’s arguments, states that the Quran never seemed to repeat the tales but instead applied the stories as an example to elaborate on its own experiences. Again, in evaluation to Fred Donner who claimed that if it is found that the prophet was copying the ideas from other sources, it could not reckon on the grounds against the acceptance that the prophet was encouraged by God. Therefore, my discussion regarding the above review, Jay’s criterion assumes that if the book copies from other sources, it cannot be an inspired book.

Shabir Ally initially confronted the authenticity regarding the NT documents. He addressed on the alleged changes and accompaniments, inconsistencies existing between scripts, and tending to claim that some sources, including 2nd Peter, were not composed by the apostles. In a bid to support the above claims, Shabir sort of appealing particularly to Bruce Metzger, the renowned professor of NT serving at Princeton Theological Seminary. He was also the writer of Manuscripts of the Greek Bible. While the debate reached to the climax, Shabir became to the limelight that he was mainly quoting the reports by Metzger who relied on giving a summary of opinions by others.
