Dear Mr/Mrs

I have known John Doe for five years now, and he is one of the kindest and most responsible people I have ever met. He has taught me to be more accountable in my life, seen me through some of the most challenging experiences, and have seen him help multiple people who come to him for support. He is a hard worker and a person who inspires people to be and do better in every situation. He works hard for him to get the best for himself and his loved ones. For instance, he was the first one to get a free 4-year scholarship in his family to go to college. His determination and hard work earned him a scholarship at Indiana University Fort Wayne, which he majors in Nursing. His passion for helping and caring for other people made him choose the nursing career. He has always been cautious and careful to avoid getting in trouble or participating in anything that will put a negative record in his career and life in general. Specifically, he is responsible enough because he has a character that wants to live a problem-free life without getting in trouble with law enforcement or any other person for that matter.

Another thing I learned about John Doe is that he avoids chaos, strife, or violence at any moment. Even if something negative is done against him, he manages to control himself and do things calmly to avoid inconveniences that might cost him in the future. Especially now that he scored a free 4-year scholarship in which a bad reputation might deter him from getting into the nursing program. He has overcome many environmental factors that could have held him back from wanting the best for him and getting ahead in life. Some circumstances can come into our lives, and we lack control over them because we are human, but that does not mean that it is our character. Hence, most times, our actions do not determine our character since actions come from a situation that we are in. Therefore, for Mr. Doe, I believe that engaging in such activities must have affected him because every person who knows him know how responsible he is. He desires self-improvement and a strong personality that will help him avoid making poor decisions now and in the future.

I do not doubt that Mr. Doe will learn from the consequences of his actions and the newfound skills he will develop when he gets into the nursing program at Indiana University Fort Wayne. I know that his family is expecting him to go and start a career that will make their son happy to serve people who depend on him and his skills. Anything that might deter him from fulfilling his dreams will shatter him because I know how highly he and his loved ones believe in him. John is a dedicated and intelligent person, with sensible reactions in all the situations I have seen him in, which makes me confident in saying that he can handle any circumstance with maturity and thoughtfulness. My friendship with John Doe has convinced me that there are people who genuinely care and love an individual for who they are, without pretending. That is why I feel honored to write this letter of character because, for the five years I have known him, he has never made me or any of his loved ones and even strangers feel low of themselves or discriminated against. He always says, "Be mindful of what you do or say to others because it might return to you ten folds."

Therefore, I believe that this action will make him a better person for himself, his loved ones, and others in the community. He also feels remorse for committing such an action, and he is working on becoming a better individual who will be in more control and responsible in the coming days. I hope that the court will consider this letter during the making of its final decision. Even through this case, I continue to believe that Mr. Doe is a good human being, a valuable individual in society, and an honorable person.

Sincerely,
