Freedom of expression is a vital human right that is essential for any society that aspires to be considered as democratic. It allows the exchange of ideas, information, as well as, opinions freely and thereby enables society members to form their personal opinions on diverse issues that are of public importance. In that regard, the freedom of expression plays a critical role in making sure that people are well informed about the various societal issues. Either way, the freedom of expression should have limitations as it can be restricted. The freedom of expression of an individual should not violate another person's rights or values. Expressions that have the potential of resulting to the violations of other people's private life or that tend to encourage hate speech have to be discouraged (Sadurski, 2014).

In that line, everyone has to learn to respect other people's culture and should not make use of the freedom of expression to ridicule different cultures. Due to the variance in beliefs, each individual has to learn to accommodate people that have diverse beliefs from him or her as long as no one is been forcefully made to pick up other people's beliefs. The world would have been more peaceful in the event the West learned to respect the Islamic blasphemy prohibitions as by ridiculing a Muslim culture is a form of violating one's privacy rights, as well as, the spread of hate speech which are restricted within the freedom of expression (Sadurski, 2014). People should not mistake the respect of other people's cultures as being a form of supporting their beliefs. There could be great harmony in the society in the event everyone observed the limits of freedom of expression.
