Managing the World

Introduction: the world comprises diverse groups with different social and cultural values. Therefore, the barriers in individuals' values may stop them from working together, especially when the protection of their identity has clashed. International law and organizations are created to address these problems and other serious human rights, poverty, and environmental concerns.

International Organizations

- International organizations play an influential role around the globe because they are associated with the development of international law that they use to operate.
- Intergovernmental organizations (IGOs) comprise. Therefore, they revolve around the joint objectives, including offering the method of cooperation for the nation and offering a platform where decisions on collaboration can be attained.
- Nongovernmental organizations (NGOs): members comprised individuals because they create a way to cooperate on shared challenges and concerns. The capacity of this organization depends on its capability to communicate its interests with no interference with the government.
- United Nations: there has been tremendous growth since World War II because members have grown from 51 to 193. The International Court of Justice (ICJ) is the legal branch of the UN.

Solution: The world comprises people with different social and cultural backgrounds, resulting in cooperation barriers. Therefore, organizations such as NGOs and IGOs are essential in facilitating this. Nevertheless, NGOs have the capacity o participate in UN conferences on problems such as human rights, gender, and sustainable development.

Conclusion: The increasing sternness of world problems that disobey national boundaries, including poverty and human rights, needs international collaboration. The development of international law and its part in controlling the universal arena, including the IGOs and NGOs, is vital.

Global Economy Vulnerable A Decade After

Introduction: the global economy will continue to shrink and stagnate if proper reforms are not generated to sustain it. Robert Triffin, the chief international financial economist during their time, explained the utilization of national currency as the primary reserve money starting from the financial crisis in 2008-2009.

Issues of the International financial non-system

- Triffin recognized three organized issues of the universal monetary non-system in 1985.
- The first issue was the fanciful inflationary inclinations resulting in global reserve surges eight times as great over 15 years since the collapse of the Bretton Woods system.
- Secondly, the tilted investment design of global reserves caused the less developed and capitalized nations to be the primary reserve creditors and the wealthier and more capitalized countries the major reserve debtors.
- Finally, the catastrophe disposed to tendencies mirrored in the plenty and occurrence of monetary calamities, including the 1980s debt issue.

Solution: the world will continue to suffer from financial crises if they do not change the global reforms. For instance, the wealthiest and industrialized nations should not import but export capital to enhance productive investment in poorer and less established countries.

Conclusion: The continued borrowing of the most developed countries had made them profoundly indebted than in the financial crisis of 2008 when they bailed great monetary institutions and did not manage to recover the economy.

Equality, Solidarity, Sustainability

Introduction: The world is facing substantial changes that focus on addressing the issues of equality, unity, and sustainability—the significant challenges in transforming the global capitalist economy and the revival of socialism.

Equality, Solidarity, and Sustainability

- Capitalism in the present neoliberal appearance is not going to offer a better material of justice and security.
- Capitalism social and political dominance notwithstanding its major crisis and ongoing incapacity to offer comprehensive development or social justice.
- Universal capitalism has always experienced both locational and geographical variations in its productive structures.
- The idea behind capitalism is exploiting and needing to control nature by privatizing and making possession concentrated.
- Unequal control of natural resources such as land antagonistically affects agricultural productivity and home market development.

Solution: countries need to create an ideal society where person fundamental conditions of life are not affected by the things they cannot control. For instance, people need a secure home, food and security, education, and social participation. Nevertheless, social and cultural variations will not end because they make life enjoyable.

Conclusion: the economic preparations can be concerned with a modest development of collective incomes and revenues as the most important goals. Therefore, other objectives must be considered, including excellent employment chances, proper living conditions, and the availability of a safe and clean environment.

Understanding France's Gilets Jaunes

Introduction: many countries have always used protest to demand change in both social and political structures. France is one of the countries that people have moved to the street several times, making it a partisan culture to the citizens.

Gilets Jaunes

- French protests have always been prepared, and unions partisan movements and student groups.
- Gilet Jaunes: is the bright yellow-vests taken by motorists as a protection strategy.
- The first protest was performed because of increased fuel taxes to improve the environmental transition and green the transport industry.

- The yellow vest continued to come to the street to champion social and economic justice every Saturday, despite most of the protestors coming for the first time since the rally comprised people from diverse political ideologies.
- Another thing outlined by yellow protestors is how the ruling class is detached from the lives and issues of ordinary individuals.

Solution: the government has a responsibility to ensure they listen to the concerns of their citizens. However, failure to do this will result in protests and the formation of groups that might decide to come up with different political opinions.

Conclusion: the public plays a vital role in ensuring economic and political justice in the country. The rising of the yellow vests outlines the catastrophe of the segregationist method. Although Europe and the whole universe face unplanned ecological, economic and social disasters, they need to change from the partisan austerity and invest in a green energy economy that provides jobs and improved life.
