Scholarship

The scholarship requires humility and awareness of the institutions' requirements.

Importantly, one should have an interest in improvements as there is no end in the learning journey. I am very passionate about achieving my first degree, pursuing a master's degree, and finally, a doctorate to become a productive scholar within the Western New England University and society. The confidence, enthusiasm, integrity, perseverance, and composure I have will see me through the journey to become what I aspired to be when I enrolled in the institution. Given the institution's relevant learning tools, I often apply some logic in the searching process to come up with the objective truth. As a university scholar, I make several inquiries based on my explorations, make sure that my work gets identified, and curious enough to know why some ideas get treated as they are. However, I am still becoming a true scholar by emulating my instructors and other scholars outside the institution.

Leadership

Active leaders portray leadership characteristics such as confidence, courage, commitment, ambition, and team members' constant engagement in achieving common goals. I believe I am an active leader in the Western New England University as I aspire to become among the best leaders after campus. Being a team leader of the project the instructor assigned us, I ensured that every group member participated by often reminding them how important the project was. I had a deeper understanding of the members with some difficulties. Giving direction and communicating with each member were among the tasks I had as a project leader. Besides, I once joined the sports team, where I volunteered as the team doctor. I had a great passion for procuring first aid to the injured team member; hence, I was much determined to be active in the group. Therefore, upon completing the studies, I would have gathered much courage, passion, and resilience in leading team members in the organization I would work with.

Service

Offering one's knowledge as service work is essential as it enhances the brain's critical thinking and development. In the recent past, I was involved in advocating for student's rights within the university. Knowing the student's interests and grievances, I initiated movements and involved my colleagues in fighting for what rightfully belonged to them. For instance, discrimination, which was common in the Western New England University, is among the vices I strongly condemned. The advocacy work was successful as actions were taken against individuals who discriminated against their fellows of a different race, sex, and disabilities. Hence, I was pleased with the institution's immediate action. Additionally, I have been involved in donating goods to the less fortunate and families affected by the calamities. Recently, there was a fire outbreak in the neighborhood, which claimed property worth millions. Being more concerned with their well-being, I organized collection drives to donate some basics to the affected persons.
