A Colonist Makes an Impassioned Call to Arms, 1775. Patrick Henry, Speech to the Second Virginia Convention

My interest in the works is the American Revolution, which was participated by a charismatic leader called Patrick Henry. Despite being a successful lawyer of the Virginia House, he still lost his position because of favoring treaties between Spain and France rather than America with England. Interesting aspect is that being an American did not prevent him from selecting countries that he thought were far better than his. However, his strong influence and opposition resulted in the formation of bills of rights.

Henry is among few leaders who are determined to bring change purposely to salvage people from the oppression. Furthermore, Henry is an opposition leader who is trusted by most people as his main focus is trust and truth. Occasionally, opposition leaders reveal some secrets wrongfully done by the government. I am impressed by the fact that Henry acknowledges God in his observation to fight the battles.

To the believers, it is God who gives strength and wisdom to overcome battles and challenges. Henry is again determined to soldier on in fighting the struggles to end their grievances. Finally, in his speech, Henry revealed that strategy was the key to battle their enemies and finally solving their issues making the work even more amazing and informative. The country had opposed the enemies for more than ten years without success, hence Henry's suggestion that they try another technique.
