Discussion 1

Health care is associated with taking care of patients and fulfilling their will as a service offering organization. However, healthcare is majorly a government project to ensure that all activities are running right. Yet, health care has a side that requires broadly strategic strategies to improve the department, ministry, or organization whose main agenda is to deliver healthcare (Mangle et al., 2018). Restrained deliberations are one of the barriers that hinder progress as strategic plans are being ignited to work better in an organization. Some of the health care organizations still use the traditional way of handling improvement and progress. The members not being part of the top management in deliberating about tomorrow of the health care organization. Authority and control are other barriers affecting healthcare strategic planning since some top leaders would suppress the good ideas raised from the subjects by other employees who have no managers. Unproductive directions towards workers may make the employees feel demotivated and fail to own up to what would be best. The three potential barriers feel like they are the main things that affect performance in health care systems.

On the other hand, specific businesses have potential barriers, making a company's strategic plan fail to foster the company for a better future of more profits. Incompetent leadership skills would act as a barrier to having the best understanding of the target in terms of strategic management (Tura et al., 2019); when a business fails to have systems put in place, the potentiality of losing becomes very high. A company or a business must have a transparent system that defines the mission, vision and goals the company has to plan strategically. Others include limited human resources in places of work, limited areas of funding and impractical business strategy. The difference between the two enterprises is that a business is profit-oriented, but health care is goal-oriented thus, different barriers would bring a change on the same.
