Positive Right

This assignment will complete the table below by comparing the personal view of explicit civil liberties to a conforming ethical theory. Also, it lists an ethical problem likely to affect a company grounded in the United States that could be attempting to acquire another company that is not based in the U.S.

	1 My Opinion	Ethical Theory	Current U.S. Government Stance	Current Stance of Another Country
The right to a higher education	I deem that every individual who is willing to pursue higher education should be granted the right to realize the latter.	Based on the dictates of Kantianism ethical theory, I believe the afore opinion is incongruent with that theory.	Although the United States government's prevailing stance is that of supporting the pursuit of higher education, I am not entirely convinced that it considers it a right (Edu.gov, 2019).	One instance of a country is the nation of France. It is currently granting equal access for both grownups and children to culture, vocational training, and instruction (Constituteproject, 2019). The state has fully assumed the duty to provide free secular and civic education transversely across all levels.
The right to private phone conversations	Just as folks were in a given room together, I view that individuals should be granted the right to hold private conversations over the phone.	Conferring to the dictates of cultural relativism, I believe the latter opinion aligns with this ethical theory.	Provided that an individual is in a private zone, lawfully, there are rights to every person that conversations over the phone have a privacy expectation. I equally believe	Conferring to the various cultures that I looked into, all showed the freedom of speech widely. Nonetheless, I did not identify factual information upon which my argument could

The right to health care	Notwithstanding factors such as country of origin, gender, or race comes in. My opinion is that healthcare ought to be a right that is affordable to the entire citizenry in any given country.	Likewise, Kantianism is the ethical theory I believe aligns well with my opinion.	Citizens in the United States are not granted healthcare as a right. The U.S government provides nothing to particular low-income populaces other than assistive healthcare. The above move is in disarray, with the 2017 majority feeling that primary healthcare should be a right that the government grants (Bialik, 2019).	In the preamble of the France constitution, healthcare is enumerated as a right. The clause asserts that it shall ascertain that all, particularly the elderly workforce, mothers, and children, have their health protected besides leisure and maternal security rest (Constituteproject, 2019).
¹The right of a presidential/government candidate to receive time on television	I feel that candidates for an office should be	I believe that this opinion aligns	This is a right in the U.S., governed by the Federal	Again, I could only show anecdotal evidence on a few

However, I could not find a law or rule that governed it. For example, in Germany, ads are limited to 90 seconds per party, per network, for a campaign's totality (Aleem, 2015).

Ethical Challenge

Concerning one ethical challenge likely to impact a company based in the United States that could be attempting to acquire another company that is not found in the US, I could think of several smaller ethical issues. However, the overarching one that comes to mind for me is about workers' rights and ensuring that they are met to other cultures' ethical outlines. In several countries, workers' rights are a constitutional right guaranteed by the government throughout the world. These can be found in most of the "free world" throughout Europe, plus many other countries (Constituteproject, 2019).
